NO CHALLENGE TO THIS LAW

In less than three decades, NLSIU has become India's foremost law institute—among a few institutions that help governments work on different legislations

By Aravind Gowda

A 10-year advantage over the rest of the law schools for decades to come. That's how those at the helm of India's premier law school, the National Law School of India University (NLSIU), look at their position in shaping some of the best legal brains in the country.

The NLSIU was a first-of-its-kind institute set up by multiple stakeholders in Bengaluru in 1987 to reform legal education and establish a centre of excellence for legal research. In less than three decades, it has become the most preferred institute for students aspiring for a successful career in different areas of law. "Thanks to the founders of this institute and their long-term vision, NLSIU is undoubtedly the best law institute in the country. We will always have a 10-year advantage over other such institutions that have come up in different parts of the country," says NLSIU Vice Chancellor Professor R. Venkata Rao.
